Surveillance abuse
From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Surveillance abuse is the use of surveillance methods or technology to monitor the activity of an individual or group of individuals in a way which violates the social norms or laws of a society.

During the FBI's COINTELPRO operations, there was widespread surveillance abuse which targeted political dissidents, primarily people from the political left and civil rights movement.

Other abuses include "LOVEINT" which refers to the practice of secret service employees using their extensive monitoring capabilities to spy on their love interest or spouse.[1]

There is no prevention in the amount of unauthorized data collected on individuals and this leads to cases where cameras are installed inappropriately. "For instance, according to the BBC, four council workers in Liverpool used a street CCTV pan-tilt-zoom camera to spy on a woman in her apartment." (Cavallaro,2007). This is just one case where culprits have been caught; however, there are still many common acts such as this. Another incident of inappropriate installation now has "Pennsylvania parents suing their son's school, alleging it watched him through his laptop's webcam while he was at home and unaware he was being observed." (Surveillance Camera Players, 2010). This leads to the misconception of surveillance, as it once was a tool to monitor and make sure citizens abide by the law, it has now created even more problems. With cameras only becoming more advanced and more common, it is difficult to determine whether these surveillance cameras are helping to ensure a safe society or leading to bigger issues altogether.

With the growing of Web 2.0, social networking sites, surveillance may be more easily and commonly abused in many situations for a variety of reasons. The Communications Security Establishment (CSE), formerly known as Communications Security Establishment Canada (CSEC), has previously spied on Canadians through the public wireless internet connections in an airport in the country. Through this they gathered information on who people called or texted and where they were when they communicated with others. The CSE search through approximately 10-15 million downloads daily. An example of where surveillance may have been abused is where Facebook and Apple have admitted to allowing government officials to access personal information of their account users.[2]

A device which may be used to abuse surveillance, called a Stingray, acts and looks similar to a cellphone tower but it tricks mobile devices into connecting with it. After connected an operator can take information stored on the device, sometimes intercepting phone calls and text messages. This method of surveillance can be used on random civilians or in an investigation of a particular person.[3]

San Diego Police Department's ABLE Helicopters Now Have Two (4 since 2016) State-of-the-Art Cameras Patrolling Local Streets
The San Diego Police Department's Airborne Law Enforcement Unit (ABLE) just received its second FLIR 380 HD camera.

By May Tjoa

Two high-definition, state-of-the-art cameras are now patrolling San Diego streets, from the skies.

The San Diego Police Department's Airborne Law Enforcement Unit (ABLE) just received its second FLIR 380 HD camera.

The cameras record very sharp images, and its zoom capability is extensive.

"Before, you would see an image, you might not be sure what it might be. It could be a human being hiding, or it could be a beehive. With the new camera, the pictures are so clear, it takes a lot of the guesswork out of it," says able pilot Phil Cady.

Each camera is mounted on an Airbus A-Star helicopter, and uses a GPS moving mapping system.

That means the camera can automatically find a target, even from miles away, regardless of what direction the helicopter is flying.

This also means they can find YOU by finding your CELL PHONE!

The camera and police radio are monitored in the cockpit by a tactical flight officer (TFO) and a pilot.

The crew began using the first FLIR 380 HD in July. (2014)

"The HD camera helped us catch a burglary in progress before officers were able to get to the location. The GPS on the camera zoomed in when the helicopter was still two miles out," says able Sergeant Craig Evans.

able is on patrol 7 days a week, about 10 hours a day, and flies out of Montgomery Field in Kearny Mesa.

The crew helps patrol officers on the ground by frequently arriving at a crime scene first, setting up a perimeter from above, and offsetting potential dangers.

"When you take a dozen officers that need to search a canyon step by step, we can search that same canyon in a matter of minutes," says Cady.

able has four Airbus A-Star helicopters, purchased in 2005.

By this summer (2015), all four helicopters will be equipped to operate the new HD cameras.

The cameras use thermal imaging, which works by comparing heat sources. So no matter how dark it is outside, the camera still sees.

"We can change the angles and perspective that we're searching. It makes it more difficult for someone to hide from us," says Cady.

The new HD camera also has a longer lens and better stabilization.

"We're able to fly much higher and much further away from the scene than we did in the past and that lowers the amount of noise that we put out to the folks on the ground," says able chief pilot Todd Jager. FUCKING BULLSHIT LAIR! THESE HELICOPTERS FLY

500 FEET above the ground!!!!

One of the helicopter's most valuable assets is speed. It takes about 12 minutes to go from Del Mar to San Ysidro, at a top speed of 155 miles an hour. Kill The Speed! & the Copter is Worthless-eh?

"In patrol, you're point of view. You're what you see directly in front of you. Here we see the whole gamut, almost as if you're coaching the game from the press box. You can see the whole field at the same time," says TFO Ryan Welch.

able has come a long way since it was formed by the San Diego Police Department in 1987, with two helicopters confiscated from a drug asset seizure.

In 2013, able responded to more than 72-hundred radio calls, was first on scene in nearly 25-hundred calls, and took part in about 18-hundred arrests.

"The senior officers have figured out how to do a great job. They turned around and trained us. They don't hold anything back, and give us all the tricks of the trade they figured out over time," says Officer Welch.

able is now known as the go-to unit for infrared tactics among law enforcement agencies around the country. Other agencies routinely ask for advice from able when starting up their own air patrol unit.

"By us using the equipment, all the time, constantly, we're completely we're in tune with the gear. We're completely practiced with using it," says Officer Jager.

A police officer must have at least 4 years of experience in patrol to apply for a TFO position. Most have 8 -12 years at the department when they are accepted into the unit.

able pilots must work as a TFO first, and have a private pilot's license. The department pays for commercial flight training.

Pilots must also learn to fly in a very complicated air space.

"With Lindbergh Field, military flights in and out of Miramar, and several general aviation airports, we're flying in the 9th most crowded air space in the world," says Sgt. Evans.

The FLIR 380 HD camera costs $380,000 dollars. A Homeland Security grant paid for the first one.

The San Diego Police Department used a state grant to buy the second camera.

able recently secured funding for a third FLIR 380 HD camera, through a grant from the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

It will likely be operational early this year. (2015)

Daniel 7:4-6 (KJV)

4 The first was like a lion, and had eagle's wings: I beheld till the wings thereof were plucked, and it was lifted up from the earth, and made stand upon the feet as a man, and a man's heart was given to it.

Revelation 13:2 (KJV)

2 And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority.

Surveillance abuse

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Surveillance abuse is the use of surveillance methods or technology to monitor the activity of an individual or group of individuals in a way which violates the social norms or laws of a society.

During the FBI's COINTELPRO operations, there was widespread surveillance abuse which targeted political dissidents, primarily people from the political left and civil rights movement.

Other abuses include "LOVEINT" which refers to the practice of secret service employees using their extensive monitoring capabilities to spy on their love interest or spouse.[1]

There is no prevention in the amount of unauthorized data collected on individuals and this leads to cases where cameras are installed inappropriately. "For instance, according to the BBC, four council workers in Liverpool used a street CCTV pan-tilt-zoom camera to spy on a woman in her apartment." (Cavallaro,2007). This is just one case where culprits have been caught; however, there are still many common acts such as this. Another incident of inappropriate installation now has "Pennsylvania parents suing their son's school, alleging it watched him through his laptop's webcam while he was at home and unaware he was being observed." (Surveillance Camera Players, 2010). This leads to the misconception of surveillance, as it once was a tool to monitor and make sure citizens abide by the law, it has now created even more problems. With cameras only becoming more advanced and more common, it is difficult to determine whether these surveillance cameras are helping to ensure a safe society or leading to bigger issues altogether.

With the growing of Web 2.0, social networking sites, surveillance may be more easily and commonly abused in many situations for a variety of reasons. The Communications Security Establishment (CSE), formerly known as Communications Security Establishment Canada (CSEC), has previously spied on Canadians through the public wireless internet connections in an airport in the country. Through this they gathered information on who people called or texted and where they were when they communicated with others. The CSE search through approximately 10-15 million downloads daily. An example of where surveillance may have been abused is where Facebook and Apple have admitted to allowing government officials to access personal information of their account users.[2]

A device which may be used to abuse surveillance, called a Stingray, acts and looks similar to a cellphone tower but it tricks mobile devices into connecting with it. After connected an operator can take information stored on the device, sometimes intercepting phone calls and text messages. This method of surveillance can be used on random civilians or in an investigation of a particular person.[3] 12 officers, two sergeants and two mechanics – thats 16.

The police helicopter named, "ABLE" (Air Borne Law Enforcement), is located at Montgomery Field at 4141 Kearny Villa Road in San Diego.

A response from the ground takes approximately 17 minutes since a helicopter start up takes a great deal of time.

ABLE usually flies missions at approximately 1500 feet during the day and 2000 feet after 11 PM to help alleviate helicopter noise.

Police helicopters are exempt from noise complaints per all State and Federal rules. WE THE PEOPLE NEED TO CHANGE THAT!

Although the Department is exempt, the Unit takes many proactive measures to minimize aircraft noise (BULLSHIT! ASK ANY ON IN UNIVERSITY HEIGHTS OR NORTH PARK, ABLE = SATAN, ACTS LIKE SATAN!) to the citizens of San Diego.

Aircrews fly at the highest operational altitudes allowed in controlled air space (BULLSHIT! ABLE + SATAN! LIES LIKE SATAN).

They also avoid going lower into residential areas unless working a priority radio call. (FUCKING BULLSHIT! ASK ANYONE IN UNIVERSITY HEIGHTS OR NORTH PARK! ABLE FLIES AS LOW AS ABLE CAN TILL SOMEONE STARTS RECORDING, THEN ABLE FLIES HIGH FAST AS ABLE CAN!)

Now to the CRUX of the matter, University Heights and Normal Heights areas

These communities are in controlled airspace for Lindbergh Field. In this area, helicopters must usually fly at or below 1500 feet to avoid airliner traffic above. (BULLSHIT! THE SKY ABOVE IS CLEAR!!!) The community is also near many transition points, such as the North-South airport transition point, I-805 and I-15 corridors for traffic helicopters, (Which Helicopters wonder away from) and many hospital approaches (military and civilian). SDPD's ABLE always tries to avoid the area and fly much higher than other helicopters to alleviate any helicopter noise. (FUCKING LAIRS ABLE)

What is the best way to evade a police helicopter?

You cannot see it but you know the helicopter is still shadowing you. Its blades thumping, carving a hole in the sky above you. Its electronic eyes unwavering, piercing through the darkness, feverishly glowing red on the hunt for you.

Are you worried that you are going to be wrongfully accused of something you had nothing to do with? Were you demonstrating against the steamrolling globalization and the oppressive forces of the economic oligarchy are on your tail?

Don't worry, brother, I got your back.

This is what more than twenty years of reading good fiction and studying human nature taught me:

If on foot, walk (do not run) into a shopping-mall; if in a car, drive slowly into the underground parking of one and park it in the first spot you can find. Your heat signature will be mixed with those of the other people there and the helicopter will lose you in the crowd. So now you only have the ground forces to deal with.

Your ultimate aim is to get away clean, without leaving behind any evidence that could physically tie you to the location you were followed at.

Keeping that in mind, let's go tactical.

First thing, walk into a bathroom, pushing the door with your elbow or knuckles. From now on you will be aware of leaving fingerprints, so keep your fingers closed – if you have to pull open a door, make a fist and use the back of your thumb. Enter a stall and instantly erase everything from your phone by doing a Factory Data Reset. That should take 40–60 seconds. Unless yours is a sterile phone (and if you have to ask, trust me, it is not), remove your SIM card and any SD Memory cards, break them in half and flush them down, twice – most public toilets do a backwash to save water. Now, turn your phone back ON, wipe it and “forget it” in a bathroom stall. Someone is bound to nick it in a few minutes. The police probably are amassing the unique IMEI numbers every cellphone transmits from the area and they will be paying close attention to any units that suddenly went and stayed dark. Any other electronic device, especially if they have WiFi capability, turn them off, wipe them for prints and throw them in the trash (do not try to flush them down, they float).

The immediate aim right now is to alter the colour and shape of your appearance for the next few minutes. So, before you exit the bathroom: if you had been wearing a jacket, remove it; if you had a hat, lose it; if you have been carrying a sweater in your backpack, wear it over your T-shirt. More importantly, if you have anything incriminating in your backpack, now is the time to wipe it down thoroughly and throw in the trash (if the cleaners have left their trolley, use their trash bag instead, it will get emptied sooner). And from now on carry your backpack like a handbag, not on your back. The helicopter has been neutralized but it certainly signaled land forces, probably providing them with your rough description, and they are only minutes away.

Now, go directly to a department store and purchase a different set of clothes. Unless you have an unusual haircut, avoid buying a hat if you did not have one: hats breed suspicion. Choose bland colours and nothing flashy. A preppy look is highly recommended: beige chinos and a sky-blue button-down oxford shirt. And do not forget the shoes – ditch the sneakers or sandals for some penny-loafers. The reason for this, will become obvious in a moment.

Avoid paying for everything at the same cashier. If you were not pressed for time I would even suggest changing stores – but not today. However, do take care for the clothes to fit you properly, so stick to brands you know. And do not forget to remove all store tags once paid for.

Obviously, use exclusively cash. If short in cash, decide to change only your outer layer – but in this case the objective is to slim down, not bulk up. A guy in a trench-coat will attract closer scrutiny.

You cannot get rid of your old clothes just yet. They carry a lot of physical evidence against you. So, carefully fold them up, place them into store shopping bags and take them with you. You will ditch them later. If you had a backpack, place it also in a shopping bag and carry it with you. So far, you were just an ordinary shopper. In a while this is going to change once more.

Remember to keep your head down (not to offer security cameras a full picture of your face) and make minimal contact with anyone but do walk with your shoulders squared up. Be calm, do not be hasty and behave as if you belong.

Now, find a flower shop and buy a single long-stemmed rose. Then, go down to the food court and have something to eat. You have been operating on an adrenaline high for some time now so you need to replenish your energy. It will be some time before you shall get the chance to eat again. Also, eating tricks our mind into calming down: animals do not eat when in danger. Avoid caffeine though, you are jumpy enough as it is.

So, try to relax, the worst is probably over. Do not look around when the police teams come in investigating. You may be curious at them but neither allow yourself to be jittery nor fake indifference. You are dressed up and just waiting for your date: that is the narrative you are projecting now. That is why you needed the preppy look. Your “girlfriend” is obviously late and you are worried for her in all this commotion – and this could also explain your nervousness. Use it to your advantage if challenged:

Are we... are we in any danger, officer?

If questioned, have a simple story prepared and stick to it. Make sure it is as close to the truth as possible, otherwise you might contradict yourself. If not, remain silent. When unprompted, people tend to fill in the gaps in a way that fulfills their initial impressions. Do not get cocky, do not be cheeky. You are not out of the woods just yet.

If the mall is ordered in a controlled evacuation, ditch the rose and make sure to be at the end of the first half of the people. That is when the underpaid security officers are more likely to let people go by faster because they see that they are only halfway done. Laziness is the only human trait one can reliably bet on and come on top more often than not.

If you arrived in your own car, leave it. Do not even go near it. Its plates and time of entry have been recorded. Not to worry, you are not losing it. Once outside, try to be polite and ask either a young man or an elderly couple for a ride. Avoid lone women and families, they will be more cautious and they might remember you afterwards. Alternatively, walk slowly to the cab stand or the bus stop but do try to be in a crowd, do not stand out. Have them take you to the next closest mall – that is where your wife/mother is supposed to be waiting for you yet you lost your cell phone in all the commotion.

And what was that all about, that was crazy, right?

During the ride do not look around, be courteous, and agree with the opinions expressed by your hosts. You should not care even if they lie on the very extreme opposite of the political spectrum. This is not the time for politics – it is the time to insert yourself on their side. This last part is important, you want them to consider you part of their tribe: they might unwittingly protect you if questioned. However, do not overplay your hand, do not drop your guard and under no circumstances allow any real information about yourself to slip out.

Once there, thank them politely and go inside. Have a 10 minute walk, go in and out of a few stores and then go back outside to catch another cab or bus near (but not at) your destination. You are still carrying your old clothes in new shopping bags. During this ride make sure that no personal items are still in those pockets. Get out four or five blocks before your destination. Start distributing your old clothes, one article at a time, to homeless persons; they will be put to good use and, at the same time, they will disappear.

The next day do not forget to report your car stolen and your cellphone lost.

And from now on, try to stay out of trouble.

The sun is just edging over the sea when the rotors stop turning. The tarmac still wet from last night’s dew, the helicopter’s canopy beading in the cold morning air. The pilot, a Desert Storm veteran, shakes his head in resignation as he pulls and detaches the com lines from his helmet.

“You don’t win them all”, he mutters under his breath.

“Damn it, you can never win them all...”

A few final notes:

Running into a subway is not a good idea: you are trapping yourself in a space with limited egress and filled with cameras and security personnel.

Heading for an airport (police helicopters are not readily allowed in the airspace of commercial airports) is even worse: you lose the helicopter but have to deal with a multitude of security surveillance as well as well trained (not to mention even better armed) personnel.

Finally, if, you did commit a crime, especially a violent one, it would be better for you to get your affairs in order, find a good lawyer and within 24 hours turn yourself in. It would ruin your life to live like this for ever.

I live in Los Angeles, a city with 37 law enforcement helicopters (19 LAPD & 18 Sheriff), each unit, police and sheriff, would be the largest municipal police aviation group in the world on their own.... but we have both. Yet people still get away.

You cannot take helicopters on their own, you have to look at the entire process. In LA County, a helicopter is never far away; they can appear in just a minute as there are many in the air all the time. The police are also allowed to shoot from their helicopters, something that recently made the news locally where a police sniper shot and killed a suspect who was hiding in a house.

The record speed for a high speed chase is 240 MPH in Dallas where the helicopter was left behind. Some chases can go hundreds of miles and last many hours, though the record is in the Ukraine at 720 miles.

Statistically nationwide, up to 35% of police chases end with the suspect getting away.[1]

Chart Suspects Get Away In 35 Percent Of High-Speed Police Chases

The successful evasion of police helicopters in Los Angeles has typically been someone ditching in a crowded shopping mall or disappearing into dense hillside brush and trees. There is also success stories of people just escaping into buildings in an urban area. All you need is to find a blind spot for a few seconds to get out of sight and then get out of the area unseen when they are looking for you where you were last seen. I witnessed such an escape up-close one night as I was held curbside by the police at 1 AM with a few others as they searched the building I was in.... 3 helicopters and the suspect was gone.

So much for thermal vision and dogs.

He did get away but it was later found that he got into the ceiling air ducting and just waited it out 24 hours or so to make his get away.

I worked in local and network news for a long time, and have probably watched hundreds of chases. After tons of newsroom discussions, I think I may have a solution.

During the pursuit, get onto the interstate and hope you don't run into traffic. If you're driving fast enough, they'll usually call off ground units, and since you're not on residential streets and neighborhoods, the concern about killing a pedestrian goes down. Then...go to the airport!

Due to all of the air traffic (and the restrictions against other aircraft over a major international airport) the helicopter couldn't follow you. They could ground air traffic, but that takes time (and costs the airport and airlines tons of money, so they're typically unwilling to do this).

Go to an underground garage, ditch the car, and change your appearance (take off your shirt or put on a jacket, add/remove a hat). Then, as calmly and boringly as possible, walk into the airport and make your way to ground transportation.

Enjoy a nice taxi, bus, or train ride to freedom.

Keep in mind – you’ll still probably get arrested. Police don’t like being embarrassed, and if your pursuit was high profile enough to justify calling out the chopper (and the media was covering it) there will be enormous pressure on the department to find you.

You may have gotten away for now, but for the rest of your life you only need to slip up once (or have a bad turn of luck) for you to get caught. Don’t bet on a plea bargain – you will go to prison for a long, long time.

If driving Head towards an airport, it would be one of the very few places they just cannot move around freely and have to drop pursuits.

Anything that can create updraft is potential hazard for a small helicopter, tall buildings, mountains a natural valley. If its an option head towards what could force the pilot to drop pursuit. Even going towards a storm front is better than going away from one.

Growing up in a city running from something was a common thing. Never a helicopter however ... As kids we always looked for buildings that had multiple exits and connecting pathway, access to basement or attic that could lead to alternative section of a building with its own exit. Construction sites were always sites to explore for exits and clever spaces to lose someone. As it was we weren’t bad kids but for some reason people (often angry adults) gave us a chase now and again. So knowing your own backyard is useful. But avoid anything with just 1 or 2 access points.

Lastly and this is a dead man’s gamble. Meaning, you are at the point of no return, capture being equal to life incarceration or death. If armed, fire at the helicopter. It’s a very expensive asset that often has to multirole different tasks for the city, hospital fire department, police. Taking fire is usually enough for military aircraft to turn tail. I’m thinking it is for them as well or increase distance between them and you making them much less effective in keeping up with you.

Side note, don’t actually hit the helicopter. Any chance you have of escape will be lost if god forbid you wound or worse yet kill a law enforcement officer. Just save yourself the trouble and kill yourself at this point.

Probably a rocket launcher. Although the charges associated with running from Law enforcement are probably going to seem very minuscule.

EDIT: Many times they will actually call off ground units if the pursuant is driving like a nut, then they will sit back and follow that car with a helicopter. The reason I mention this is your obstacle will not be many squad cars and a helicopter, just a helicopter staying a safe distance. To make life a little more difficult, there have been pursuits in my area where although the main follower is a police helicopter a news chopper is also there and stays in contact with the police and in times has acted as a extra set of eyes.

I wanna say there are some airports that have tunnels going under runways, these tunnels (I have heard mixed comments regarding this) will prevent the police helicopter to fly over a runway without clearance. I have heard this clearance is almost instantaneous and is really a non issue, I have also heard this will delay a helicopter by a few minutes.

Even so if you outrun the helicopter, by using the maneuver above, there is almost no way you can outrun the radio. (Scratch that) almost no way you can outrun the helicopter and even less chance of outrunning a helicopter using its radio.

It’s nearly impossible in a vehicle with a few exceptions. If I were being tailed by a helo and wanted to lose it for sure I would head for the nearest Airport. The bigger the better. That is highly controlled airspace which requires clearance to enter which wouldn’t (and couldn’t be granted “on the fly” ...lol...pun intended).

That would clear your tail from the air. The weakness of helicopter surveillance is telling one vehicle from another. It’s easy to lose a vehicle all together if you don’t keep it under constant surveillance. If you were able to get to an airfield you could clear them off your tail all together.

If you’re in a hot pursuit kind of thing with a Chopper calling the pursuit the best way would be drive into a heavily forested area or a mall covered parking garage. To really make that practical though you would have to abandon the vehicle in there and run away on foot once they lost visual on you.

In all practicality though once a Police Helicopter has you in its sights it's almost impossible to shake it off. Especially if you try to remain in a vehicle.

You won't evade long enough for it to run out of fuel unless you get very lucky and it takes the job at the end of the shift when it was due to land to refuel or go out of service shortly before the call. I used to fly as the Observer here and there. A good friend of mine from my Police Academy Class was the main Pilot (he was a former Marine Helo Pilot before being a Cop). Another guy from my Class was his full time observer.

When he was off sick or had other duty's I would fill in. I worked the radio and my job was to keep my eyes on the suspect or suspect vehicle. I really loved doing it...plus it was all overtime. I would have done it for free. You really feel like the real deal when you're up there.

The job requires sharp eyes, the ability to multi task and above all knowledge of the City streets. You have to be able to look down on a street and know what it is as well as its hundred block to be of any use. It's harder than it sounds.

Technology helps. Once you lock the FLIR (thermal imaging which locks onto heat) it becomes fairly easy to follow anything at night. Below is a pic of my departments chopper. My favorite tool was this incredible spot light it had called "Midnight Sun". When you turned that on night becomes day and it's like a bolt of light from the heavens. I loved orbiting in progress scenes and providing illumination and overwatch for the Officers on the ground. Like I said before, evading that type of aerial search platform with the tools available today on board is close to impossible. That never stops people from giving it the old College try though...

Ingredients:

-Car/truck

-A friend

-Large gun with many pew pews, preferably in a bag ↓

-Mean helicopter who won't leave you alone, and maybe some of it's discount helicopter friends.

(What is this??? ^)

Instructions:

Step 1: Go fast, forwards. Don't crash and don't let the budget helicopters crash into you.

Step 2: Either you or your friend open window and grab big gun with many pew pews, preferably in a bag.

Tip: The other needs to drive

Step 3: Apply many pew pews, (using the large gun with many pew pews, preferably in a bag), to the helicopter until it starts spinning.

Step 4: With the same method, apply more pew pews to the fake helicopters (using the big gun with many pew pews preferably in a bag), until they also start to spin.

Step 5: Repeat steps 3 and 4 until no more helicopters or their cheap rip-offs are following you anymore.

Step 6: Enjoy freedom*.

P.S. This may not work.

Head towards the nearest major airport, like LAX or JFK or whatever's in your city. You don't enter the airport itself but get under the restricted airspace up to about a mile away where planes are approaching or departing at low altitude and where there are dense homes and other buildings. Even the police helicopter is not likely to get quick clearance to enter that airspace and absolutely cannot do so without clearance from the airport control tower. The FAA, a Federal agency controls airspace rules. Abandon the vehicle and try your escape on foot. They're not going to close a major airport like those for anything short of a murder, and even that's doubtful.

Small airports won't do, has to be a very large busy one. If it's a stolen car try to wipe it down for fingerprints, if it's your car, you're probably toast but get out of the area and immediately report it stolen.

Not much of a chance but it's the best you've got. Yes I saw this work once with a stolen motorcycle just east of LAX, though that was in the early 90's when the surveillance technology on the helicopters was not as good. Don't know if he was smart or dumb lucky.

Go into a shopping mall. Change your clothes. Stroll out with all the other shoppers and get into the completely non-descript car that you pre-positioned at a different exit than the one you entered at. You'll be gone before ground cops can surround the mall, and they'll be looking for someone dressed differently than you.

This works best in older cities, but I believe that the best way to evade a police helicopter is to travel through the sewer/ underground subway tunnels. If we take a city like New York City, in addition to having an extensive underground subway system it also has a massive sewer system. Many of these tunnels lead to abandoned or poorly/rarely areas. Someone trying to evade capture would certainly have to contend with the dedicated men and women of the NYPD, but a police helicopter would be of minimal concern. For those who believe that my answer doesn't answer the question for those who live in more rural areas, I suggest using a rocket launcher to shoot it down, then worry about the other officers in pursuit.

Given the previous answer was way too much "Dad" and not enough "GTA" I will give it a go. Provided you can prevent being boxed in by the omniscient view of the helicopter and it's coordinated ground units in the first place, your best bet is to make it to a covered or underground, high trafficked area and attempt to lose the pursuers under cover, broken line of sight and crowds. An airport might serve this function also. It's not a guarantee of course, but the fundamental problem is to lose the pursuers as you aren't going to be able to outrun them.

Flying in bad weather is a bad bet, even worse in a helicopter. Fog, wind, rain and lightning will be your allies. Daytime running in the open is the worst idea for you. Do the opposite. Move when you are sure you won't be spotted, then hide for awhile – at least until you are rested. Get underwater or underground if you can. Forests are helpful. Stay on firm ground, out of mud and snow; you will slow down and the tracks are very visible from the air. Entering a structure/building is only sensible if you know there are alternate exits.

Running into a very crowded area is probably your best bet. Thermal imaging does not show color and so it is very, very difficult for the operator to keep track of you once you've entered an area full of hundreds of other people. The camera can be switched to normal color on most FLIR units, but even so, just a brief moment out of view in a crowded area is likely to buy you a lot of time.

Changing clothing while in or near a public area would probably secure your getaway.

FLIR also can't see through glass and certain metals and things like certain thermal blankets. Glass shows up as opaque as you can see in Roger Kryson's photographs. You can't make a glass suit, but for example, if you were trying to create a hiding space, you could line parts of a vehicle compartment with glass panels and thermal blankets on the inside and it would prevent FLIR from being able to see you inside. Eventually though, your body heat would warm up the rest of the vehicle and the exterior metal would begin to glow. A clever FLIR operator may catch this, especially if you are hiding in an isolated area away from other people and on a cold day. Alternatively on a hot day, a sharp operator may notice the unusual opaque spots of the glass and get curious.

Long story short, if you need to hide from FLIR, big crowds and glass are probably your best shot.

The short answer: You fucking can't.

Until then my heists were impeccably planned: A numbered brokerage account at a private bank in Geneva. A few million stashed in Kuala Lumpur. Brussels. Diamonds in Antwerp. Eurobonds in São Paulo. A real estate company in Johannesburg.

Our target was a German financial company that operated a currency-export office in downtown Kuala Lumpur. This was six years ago. Angela and I scoped it out. They had a big vault at the top of a skyscraper where they'd cage up incoming local currencies before distributing them to their branches all around Asia. They were loaded.

Every hour or so an armored truck would come in through the basement and drop off another few boxes of cash from the airport. In order to get to the vault, they'd use this high-tech super-secure elevator that led right to the top floor. Marcus figured out how to make that elevator ours. Once we got in, we took over the bank for a full hour in broad daylight. We drilled the vault door and emptied out everything inside. In the end, the take was something like seventeen and a half million dollars. It was more money than any of us had ever seen before. But then everything went wrong.

The team of perpetrators (myself included) was said to have planned for the dreaded things to be miles away on training routines. Too far to be a problem.

But the team also did not make sure a certain undercover cop was dead. One who later informed the Malaysian police of their plan. Most of them were killed or tear gassed and rounded up. They did not get the money.

The cops waited for us to hit the bank. The moment we got in that elevator, the skyscraper went Dog Day Afternoon. The Royal Malaysian Police sent in helicopters to circle the building and cordoned off a ten-block radius in the busiest part of the city so no traffic could get through. The building was surrounded by squad cars. By the time we cracked the vault, we had two different hostage negotiators on hold, one in English and one in Malay. At the time, the Royal Malaysian Police had only a handful of helicopters for the whole country.

They were search and rescue choppers, not air-cav. Back then, all of them were out at sea almost all the time, scouting for pirates and smugglers. Only one worked near Kuala Lumpur, and during the hour we hit the bank it was supposed to be doing training exercises a hundred miles away in Ipoh. In order to respond to us, it would've needed to land and fuel up.

Even if the police did everything perfectly, it would take them at least forty minutes to bring the chopper back. We would've ruled the air for an hour or more. We could bypass the police blockade completely, and fire off some tear gas grenades from the roof as a diversion. Even if the cops followed our helicopter, we'd fly toward the airport, so they couldn't follow us without threatening air-traffic control. We'd stay under the radar, land somewhere deep in the country. When we planned the heist, we knew the cops would respond. That was inevitable.

Nobody robs a bank for an hour without anybody showing up. We'd planned for squad cars and roadblocks, and even hostage negotiators. But because the police knew we were coming, they had time to prepare. Roadblocks and squad cars didn't mess with our plan—but helicopters did. Once we'd finished the heist, our plan was to escape through the roof.

Above the bank was a private helipad where the regional executive kept a chopper fueled and ready to take him back and forth between the office and his estate in the Genting Highlands. He was out for the day, so his luxury helicopter was just sitting there. It would seat all seven of us just fine, plus all our equipment.

Without clear airspace, our getaway was a nightmare. As soon as we touched the roof, we were open to sniper attack. Then, even if we managed to get to the chopper, the police could follow us anywhere. Hell, they could've shot us down. The whole rooftop exit was ruined. Instead, we had to take the secure elevator back down to the basement, steal an armored vehicle and drive right through the barricades onto the street and outrun the cops through the heart of the city. It was a dumb move, but we didn't have a choice. We could either take our chances on the road or get blown out of the sky. We chose the road.

We came out guns blazing. It was like Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid. I can still remember the smell of gunpowder from my assault rifle, the blinding pain of tear gas and the ringing in my ears. I was never more afraid or excited in my life. One of our crew members took a bullet to the head even before we were all out of the elevator. I raised my assault rifle and pissed bullets at the barricade, but was shot three times and had to snort ungodly amounts of cocaine to get myself to keep going.

That's when we all split up. There was tear gas everywhere, so I didn't see where everybody went. I took off on my own. I lost the police in the marketplace, then went back to my scatter. I changed my identity and left the country as quickly as I could.

Mr Hayes, our jugmarker, also survived. He wasn't even in the country when all this went down. He planned the whole thing from the back of his diner in Seattle. As soon as he got the news, he went to ground. He hid out in Mexico for close to six months before the heat blew over. It was like he dropped off the face of the earth.

He disconnected all his phones and tore up his Rolodex. By the time he came back, his reputation was ruined. He never saw the inside of a prison, but he never ran a big-time heist again. It was the end of his career and he'd scour the globe the next six years looking to kill me.

I'd eventually settle the score but that's a whole other story involving a casino robbery, setting up a guy with federal payload cash and more deaths than I can count.

In other words, you have to plan intensively before doing anything big enough that it will attract helicopters.

Unless perhaps you can jam it and have it crash or fire at it. None of these things are easy when you have heat on you.

Roger Kryson writes a very good answer. I will only add that going into a parking garage, or a large populated building may help, but the helicopter knows what building you are in and will direct officers on the ground who will surround and search the building.

I've read, but don't know if it works, that the mafia would go to large airports because the air space around the large airports are tightly controlled so the police helicopters are not allowed to enter that air space.

there are only three possibilities I can think of. You can climb so high or move so fast you are no longer within range of the helicopter and its equipment. You can go under the ground so deep that their equipment can no longer locate you. Or, you could destroy or disable the helicopter so it no longer can do anything.

Frankly, none of those possibilities are very realistic.

The film "Heat" illustrates it succinctly: Duck into the airport. It's not the worst idea. There's a non-zero chance that active traffic would force the police copter to back off. Slip the dragnet, ditch the car, grab a cold one at the airport bar and you're home free, right?

But the film scene was, and this is important: surveillance. Hot pursuit will get a lot, lot, LOT more attention, from both the fuzz and the airport.

By avoiding its attention in the first place.

If one or more are already overhead, by refraining from activities they are trying to detect.

By continuing to drive as carefully as possible, thus avoiding traffic jams and accidents caused by rubbernecking.

Possibly by pulling over into a parking lot until the chaos calms down.

If you are on foot, go into the subway and catch a train or go into a place where there are plenty of people, such as a mall. Then exit someplace else, preferably in different clothes.

If you are in a vehicle, drive into a parking garage and exit on foot.

If you are in an aircraft, hope they run out of fuel before you do.

I am speculating... but if I were attempting to evade a helicopter I would drive into a airplane flight path at a major airport like LAX. Also, there always seem to be hotels around airports with parking structures. However, this is hypothetical and speculation but I'm pretty sure that this is a good start and may work if you are resourceful. I just saying...

Seriously – you don't need to evade a helicopter as they are not the ones catching you. Try to evade the police on land, they are the ones who will definitely catch you. I don't recommend this though

Depending. If your fleeing in a motor vehicle or not the best way to elude a helicopter is try to drive near to closest airport as the chopper will not be aloud to enter private airspace, or if your fleeing on foot, or on a bike try to find a deeply wooded area the chopper will have a hard time locating you through the trees.

Nnnnnnnnnndont crash and dont get caught on a dead end street. Get into a mall and disappear into the crowd. The airport is another good choice. Change your clothes and walk out the other side. Try to have somebody pick you up. Jump on the bus or take a cab to get out of the area.

"U235 and U238 are two member of Uranium isotope. Atomic number of both is 92, while neutron numbers of U238 and U235 are 146 and 143, respectively. Therefore, Formed compound nuclei by absorption of one neutron in ^{238}U and ^{235}U are $^{239}\text{U}^$ and $^{236}\text{U}^$. It is clear that the excitation energy of $^{236}\text{U}^$ is greater than due to pairing energy compared to the excitation energy of $^{239}\text{U}^$ if kinetic energy of absorbed neutrons are the same. As a result, ^{235}U undergoes fission by the absorption of neutron with very low energy while ^{238}U undergoes fission by the absorption of fast neutron ($E_n > 0.6 \text{ MeV}$). Atomic percentage of ^{235}U and ^{238}U in natural uranium are about 0.72% and 99.28% respectively. ^{238}U also undergoes spontaneous fission with very low rate, so that the spontaneous fission half life of this nucleus is about 10^{15} years. The half life of ^{235}U is smaller than the half life of ^{238}U by a 10 factor, approximately. Due to this fact, in the future the atomic percentage of ^{235}U becomes smaller than 0.72%."
